Overview

Patrick Causey is a Shareholder in the firm's Litigation and Dispute Resolution Group. He concentrates his practice in business and healthcare litigation.

Patrick is a business attorney serving as outside general counsel to businesses ranging in size from start-ups to multi-national corporations. Patrick represents these businesses in, intellectual property, contract, trade secret, and unfair business practice disputes, with significant experience in non-compete and non-solicitation litigation. Patrick has written extensively on emerging issues in the non-compete space for publications such as Market Watch, Tampa Bay Business Journal, and Tampa Bay Business & Wealth Magazine. Patrick also leverages his experience as a trial lawyer to help clients take proactive steps to avoid litigation, including by resolving disputes prior to a lawsuit being filed, and negotiating and drafting contracts with a company's vendors, customers, and employees.

Patrick also has significant experience defending doctors, chiropractors, and healthcare providers against fraud and RICO claims brought by health insurance companies. Because insurance companies have aggressively targeted healthcare providers for alleged fraud, particularly in Florida, Patrick advises clients on changes that can be made to their healthcare practice to avoid possible claims from insurers. He also represents healthcare providers in pre-suit negotiations with those insurance companies, and has successfully resolved claims before a lawsuit is filed. Patrick also has experience defending these medical providers in claims filed in federal court.
