Overview

Welcome to TrenamTech, a service of Trenam Law dedicated to serving the unique legal needs of technology entrepreneurs and investors.

At a minimum, nearly every business today is tech-enabled and faces regulatory and compliance issues of the digital age, from data security and privacy mandates to multistate tax and remote workforce challenges. Trenam's experienced business attorneys have been serving tech and tech-enabled businesses since technology became an integrated element of business operations over three decades ago. We have continued to evolve along with our clients and the communities we serve, especially as the state of Florida has experienced an unprecedented tech boom in recent years. TrenamTech is a natural byproduct of this evolution and an expression of our commitment to serve the legal needs of stakeholders in the growing technology ecosystem.

In addition to representing technology companies and the angel and VC investors who provide capital for their growth, Trenam attorneys have been active contributors to entrepreneur support organizations. Our attorneys serve on boards of Synapse Florida, Tampa Bay Wave, and Florida Venture Forum, to name a few, and our firm sponsors and supports educational and industry events. With the launch of TrenamTech, our firm's immersion into the tech ecosystem will expand, and we will enthusiastically embark on this journey.

TECH ENTREPRENEURS

Trenam has guided technology entrepreneurs from startup to exit and everything in between for two decades. Whether your venture falls into MedTech, EdTech, PropTech, FinTech, TravelTech, or any of the other industry segmentations, TrenamTech draws from the firm's multidisciplinary practice groups to meet your needs. Launch

In the early stages of your technology business, your legal needs will fall into these categories:

- Entity selection, formation, and governance
- Equity grants to founders
- Founders' agreements (shareholder, buy-sell, and operating agreements)
- Tax elections, planning, and compliance
- Business licenses and regulatory compliance
- Intellectual property protection
 - Confidentiality (non-disclosure) agreements
 - Trademark search and registration
 - Copyright
 - Patent
 - Intellectual property assignment and work-for-hire agreements
 - Licensing agreements
 - Fictitious name registrations

Many of the legal needs of the Grow stage will also happen in this start phase, especially if you are a solo founder aiming to attract a team through equity grants.

Scale

Once you have a minimum viable product (MVP) and you're ready for BETA users or a full-scale launch, you have reached your growth stage. Your legal needs are sure to escalate as you navigate more complex decisions and require growth capital. Among the common legal needs of this stage are:

- Entity reorganizations, including conversions of LLCs to C corporations
- Employee and independent contractor agreements, including restrictive covenant agreements
- Equity compensation plans and grant agreements for employees to attract and retain talent (restricted stock units, stock options, profits interests)
- Advisory board development and advisor agreements, including equity grants
- Suite of contracts for your company, including a SaaS/PaaS service agreements, master services agreement/scope of work, terms of use, privacy policies
- Contract review (vendors, suppliers, and channel partner agreements)
- Risk management (insurance, limiting liability through contracts, dispute resolution)
- Office space (lease or purchase of commercial space)
- Funding your startup with traditional business loans
- Raising capital from angel investors or venture capital (SAFE, convertible debt, priced rounds) and associated compliance with securities laws
- Receiving investment from a private equity firm

Sell

Not every technology company is built to sell in three to seven years, and some will continue to operate under the same ownership group as when founded. However, it is common for tech companies – especially those funded by venture capitalists looking for an exit with a large multiple – to pursue an exit event where the founders, employees, and investors are rewarded. Knowing your plan will help direct whether you pursue fast growth over profit or sacrifice some growth to make the company profitable earlier on. Either way, you should build your business using best practices that a buyer will value so that when you are ready to sell – or a buyer comes knocking with an offer you cannot refuse – the company has not only curb appeal, but a solid foundation and beautiful interior operations.

The sale stage includes the following legal needs:

- Identifying and selecting an M&A Advisor (investment banker or business broker)
- Preparing for a buyer's due diligence – a legal and financial audit
- Setting up a virtual data room
- Assessing valuation and the flow of funds to all stakeholders upon sale
- Evaluating rollover equity and employee compensation packages offered by the acquirer
- Advising on tax implications
- Evaluating, negotiating, and drafting transaction documents
- Post-closing guidance to ensure compliance with transactions documents

Invest

Often successful entrepreneurs evolve into investors in early-stage companies.

Tech Investors

Whether you are an angel investor who sources your own deals and invests independently, or a general partner of a to-be-formed or existing venture capital fund, the business and securities attorneys associated with TrenamTech are available to represent your interests as you evaluate and invest in startups and growth-stage technology companies.

Our investor clients range from investors who request a limited scope review of certain deal documents or aspects of the targeted portfolio company to investors who engage us for extensive legal, due diligence and transaction document preparation.
